Pastoral Care: A Priority	3

Introduction

When the Ursuline Sisters of the Central Province entered the National Religious Retirement Office's (NRRO's) Planning and Implementation Assistance program in 2013, their skilled-care cost was $20,000 above the NRRO's reported national average. Without a drastic change in expenses, their savings and investments were projected to be depleted by 2022. The Ursulines knew they had to act. "We were open to all possibilities, whether that meant restructuring our own facility, collaborating with another congregation, or even relocating our sisters," explained Provincial Leader Sister Rita Ann Bregenhorn.

Part of the Roman Union of Ursuline Sisters, the congregation first came to the United States in 1727 and currently has three provinces across the country. The Central Province has 114 members and includes sisters and ministries in Illinois, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Missouri, and Texas.

At one time, the community operated two infirmaries, one in Texas and one in Alton, Illinois. In 1992, the Texas facility was closed and consolidated with Alton, a three-story, forty-bed unit. Over time, the census in the Alton infirmary declined, so that by 2012, only eighteen sisters were being cared for there. Underutilized space and staffing requirements resulted in a skilled-care cost of $93,000 per sister. The building joining the infirmary, known as Alton Convent, was home to an additional sixteen sisters who were able to live independently yet benefitted from basic services, such as meal preparation. Because neither location was licensed, the community was not eligible for government benefits and covered all costs of care.

A Community Decision

In April 2012, members were surveyed regarding their greatest areas of concerns for the future. One-third of the replies related to eldercare. In response, the Ursulines created a focus group to study the issue and research possible solutions. The focus group contacted the NRRO and applied for participation in Planning and Implementation Assistance.

“Before we entered Planning and Implementation Assistance, we had no idea of all the financial and consultative help that was available to us through the NRRO.”

After their initial planning workshop in 2013, the Ursulines received an NRRO-sponsored eldercare evaluation. This feedback, as well as their own investigations, quickly led the focus group to conclude that relocating their sisters to facilities with available Medicaid beds was the most viable option. At a November 2013 meeting, the rest of the community concurred and voted to close the Alton facility. Now the goal was to identify care options where the sisters could continue to live in community—where they would be close to one another, have access to daily Eucharist, and have space to gather for prayer and activities.

Finding an appropriate setting and the necessary number of Medicaid beds proved to be a tall order. In the St. Louis area alone, the community contacted more than forty facilities with no success. However, in late 2013 and after many dead ends, the solutions to their care challenges came in quick succession.

Saint Clare’s Villa: A New Option for Assistance

The Ursulines discovered space was available at Saint Clare’s Villa. Located just minutes from the Alton Convent, Saint Clare’s is a ministry of the Sisters of St. Francis of the Martyr St. George and is designated as a supportive care facility by the State of Illinois. As such, it is eligible for Medicaid reimbursements through the state’s Supportive Living program, which is designed for seniors who can live independently with some assistance. As a Catholic institution, it has a chapel with daily Mass, ample opportunities for prayer and community, and is home to religious from other congregations as well as lay residents. Eleven sisters formerly living at the Alton Convent now reside there in efficiencies or small, one-bedroom apartments and receive basic services, including meals and housekeeping.

Skilled Care: A Two-Pronged Solution

A community member living in the New Orleans area learned that Our Lady of Wisdom (OLW) Healthcare Center had seven Medicaid beds available in a newly renovated wing. Although the Ursulines of the Central Province were one of the original sponsors of the facility, only one of their sisters had ever received care there. Several sisters in the infirmary had ministered in the New Orleans area, so moving to OLW was like coming home for them. At OLW, the sisters' rooms are adjacent to one another in their own "neighborhood." Seven sisters relocated to OLW in the spring of 2014, and, as founding members, the Ursulines will continue to receive priority placement for their sisters as needed.

Pastoral Care: A Priority

In addition to managing the financial and administrative aspects of the relocation, the Ursulines were also focused on meeting the affected sisters' pastoral needs. A first step was to apply for an NRRO Management and Continuing Education Assistance award to enable them to engage the services of the Franciscan Sisters of Mary in Bridgeton, Missouri. The Franciscans had recently relocated their own senior members, so they understood the challenges involved. They facilitated a process to help the Ursulines living in the infirmary and Alton Convent cope with their anxieties about relocation.

Moving took place in three phases and was not without heartache. "There were a lot of tears," said Sister Rita Ann, "and a lot of assurances that we would be with them every step of the way." Although it was not easy, the community was blessed to have an exceptional lay staff and pastoral presence to support each sister through the transition.

Pastoral care remains a priority as the sisters strive to embrace community life in their new environments. They continue traditions such as "Ursuline Share," a gathering between the local prioress and community members where sisters receive updates on province news and then reflect on and discuss specific topics. Activities and social events also keep the sisters connected, but their primary link is a shared prayer life.

Sister Susan Kienzler (standing), prioress of the Alton community, meets with senior members living at Saint Clare's Villa. "This has been a year of learning how we are going to be a community residing in different locations," she says. "My ministry is to facilitate this new style of community living."

A New Approach to Community Life

The final piece of the puzzle came together when the sisters were informed of available Medicaid beds at Price Memorial in nearby Eureka, Missouri. The skilled care facility was a ministry of the Franciscan Missionary Brothers of the Sacred Heart of Jesus. With only five Franciscans left in the community, the brothers felt it was time to give up the center, but they wanted to retain its Catholic identity. So a solution was created whereby the brothers donated the property to a new, nonprofit corporation. The Ursulines provide canonical sponsorship but have no operational or fiscal responsibility for the facility, which was renamed St.

Andrew's at Francis Place. The center is overseen by St. Andrew's Resources for Seniors System, a senior-services company experienced in working with religious communities.

At thirty-five years old, the facility needed some remodeling. Renovations are estimated to cost $2 million, and the Ursulines have committed $1 million, $500,000 of which came from an NRRO Implementation Assistance award. Enhancements include updates to the dining areas, shower facilities, and entranceway as well as the addition of on-site laundry facilities.

The sisters residing at Francis Place are all located on one wing of the building, and each has a private bedroom. Daily Mass is offered, and the sisters have numerous opportunities to gather as a community. Prioress Sister Susan Kienzler and Sister Deana Walker visit Francis Place on alternating days and weekends to ensure the sisters' physical and pastoral needs are met.

The Road Ahead

By taking advantage of Medicaid funding and closing their underutilized facility, the Ursulines are projected to save $20 million over the next ten years. Additionally, the community is working to sell the Alton property, along with other congregational holdings. These changes should stabilize their retirement savings.
